Rendering of Roman Forum at night after reconstruction someday. (Gilbert Gorski). Above is how the Roman Forum might look at night today if it had never degenerated into ruins since the empire, or if it had been reconstructed as it was at the apogee of its ancient fame. The work, by Gilbert Gorski, was given to LÃ©on Krier as consolation for the rejection, by Gorski's publisher, of Krier's introduction to The Roman Forum: A Reconstruction and Architectural Guide, by Gorski and James Packer. (Krier's essay was posted in its entirety in Krier: Ruins and discontents. History Press asked me to write and in August 2017 published my first book, "Lost Providence." I am now writing my second book. The Roman Forum: An Architectural and Reconstruction Guide by Gilbert J. Gorski and James E. Packer was published by Cambridge University Press in 2015. It is a huge and heavy volume: hardcover (with a dust jacket); large format (24 x 31 cm); 437 pages, with numerous illustrations. Most of them are in colour, while some of them are in black-and-white. The book is divided into three parts: PART ONE covers the history of the Forum: Chapter 01 "The Augustan Reconstruction Chapter 02 "From Tiberius to Phocas. PART TWO covers the ancient monuments one by one: Chapter 03 "The Temple of Antoninus and Faustina Chapter 04 "The Temple of Caesar Chapter 05 "The Basilica Aemilia Chapter 06 "The Curia Chapter 07 "The Arch of Septimius Severus.
