I sat upright in bed and stared, unseeing, into the darkness. Blood was thunder in my ears, sweat clammy on my face. I took deep, gulping breaths. So close this time. One hand brushing the glass before the explosion of colour brought me back to this, the grainy blackness and the pulse of sound. It took a few moments before I realised the pulse was outside the room. As my heartbeat slowed, I was able to focus on the sound. A double blurt. Rhythmical.
