I've reviewed many How-To, motivational and inspirational books and I've noticed patterns and examples that generate warm and fuzzy feelings but are more philosophical than offer practical applications. I only learned about Ken Atchity because he was a keynote speaker at a conference I was attending. Pursue Your Impossible Dream A Guide to Transforming Your Career. Kenneth Atchity. Helios press new york. How many times have you felt as if you were hurtling toward a brick wall at ninety mph and someone supposedly dear to you gave you the advice, "Slow down!" or "Relax"? As many times as I've been advised to slow down, I've wondered whether hitting the wall at thirty mph was truly preferable to hitting it at ninety. If you're going to go splat, make it a complete splat! How else will you find out in time whether that wall is, in fact, as you imagined, the secret door to your dreams?
