Service and supports for people with disabilities are those government or other institutional services and supports specifically provided to enable people who have disabilities to participate in society and community life. Some such services and supports are mandated or required by law, some are assisted by technologies that have made it easier to provide the service or support and others are commercially available not only to persons with disabilities, but to everyone who might make use of them. Students with learning disabilities may find it difficult to acquire knowledge or skills in the same ways as their peers. This could mean they struggle to learn through traditional teaching methods, or that they wrestle with a curriculum designed for students their age. Common Learning Disabilities. Dyslexia - Connected to reading abilities. Some of the services provided to help students with learning disabilities succeed include; learning access programs, counseling services, community wellness and health education, and assistive technology centers. Examples of schools creating best practice models for incorporating wellness strategies include Allina Health - Scholarship for People with Disabilities. Visit the Scholarship Page. Parents could apply for Child Disability Benefit on behalf of their kids while adults can apply for Disability Tax credit and CPP Disability Benefit. People with learning disabilities have a biological brain make up which counterintuitively functions to typical memory, reasoning, planning, organizational, and attention tasks. These disabilities are often lifelong and create a divide between intellectual abilities and actual success, especially when the learning disability is unidentified. That's why it's supremely important to evaluate the possibility of the presence of a learning disability while a child is young. That way they can gain the tools they need to function, thrive, and learn as individuals. Parents and special education teacher
