The early American Modernists may be usefully understood as the generation of artists born primarily between 1875 and 1890 who promulgated the new languages of modern art—"fauvism, cubism, futurism, orphism, synchronism, expressionism, Dada"—both in the United States and abroad. This remarkably small group constituted a true avant-garde; over the course of the twentieth century legions of artists would follow in their wake. Presented here are details of a selection from the twenty works on exhibit in American Modernism: The Shein Collection, organized by Charles Brock and Nancy Anderson, with Harry Cooper.
