Australian political system. Contents. Introduction. The Executive Branch. The House Of Representatives. The Australian political system is an interesting version of democracy - for several reasons. First, voting is compulsory, although the penalty for non-compliance is only a fine of up to A$170 (Â£100), and turnouts of more than 90% are routine in both federal and state elections. Second, federal elections are held at least every three years, whereas in most countries general elections are every four or five years (it is true that American congressional elections are every two years but the US is a Presidential system whereas Australia is a Prime Ministerial system).
