Aims

1. To introduce students to the cyclical patterns between housing, homelessness, re-offending and (re)imprisonment.
2. To critically assess the housing inequalities facing ex-offenders and prison leavers, and evaluate resettlement projects established to tackle these inequalities.
3. To critically assess re-housing strategies surrounding 'unsuitable' and 'inappropriate' tenants in the community.
4. To critically interrogate crime control strategies, such as the Crime and Disorder

Act 1998, that criminalise activities associated with homeless peoples' daily routines.

Learning Outcomes

After completing the module the student should be able to:

- 1 Critically assess housing, homelessness and re-offending in relation to poverty, insufficient housing and lack of housing support upon leaving prison.
- 2 Critically analyse common assumptions and prejudices that stigmatise homeless populations as perpetrators of crime.
- 3 Critically evaluate the limits of official and state level knowledge concerning homeless peoples' experience of crime, violence and victimisation in society and engage with alternative studies by prison and homeless charities.
- 4 Critically engage with the gender divide in levels of welfare provision between families experiencing homelessness (mostly headed by single females), compared to welfare provision to rough sleepers and ex-offenders (mostly single men).
- 5 Critically engage with key texts and authors within housing, homelessness and prison studies.
- 6 Negotiate, select, plan and deliver an online blackboard discussion and an essay that critically engages with the course content.

Learning Outcomes of Assessments

The assessment item list is assessed via the learning outcomes listed:

Essay: 2500 words	1	2	3	6
Online discussion: 500 words	1	2	3	4	5	6

Outline Syllabus

Overview: Provide a contemporary analysis demonstrating the links between the homelessness, hidden homelessness, people becoming homeless upon leaving prison and re-offending.

Explanations of re-offending and homelessness: Introduce some of the indicative causal explanations surrounding homelessness and re-offending.

Policy and Practice: Introduce some of the key studies of charities and government agencies in tackling the social inequalities facing young people, prisoners and homeless people. Amongst others, these include: Crisis, NACRO, Supporting People, Youth Justice Board, the Social Exclusion Unit and the Howard League for Penal Reform.

Learning Activities

Note-taking, reading, online participation, general contribution to classes, effective working within groups, preparation of essay drafts for final essay assessment, as well as use of Blackboard and the participation in an online discussion.

Notes

This module will establish the links between homelessness, insufficient housing and re-offending. As well as guide students through the relevant legislation and policy programmes that have both a negative and positive impact on homelessness and ex-offenders, this module will also provide students with a deep understanding about governance strategies of the state in relation to crime control prevention strategies and the privatisation of public space. Bringing these disparate research areas under one module, students will acquire a deep-seated understanding of types of crime as caused through poverty and, how appropriate housing can reduce re-offending.

Although rough sleeping is the most damaging form of homelessness, it is also the least prevalent and so it is entirely within the power of policy makers and service providers to end it. There has never been more evidence about how to do so. On any given night, there are an estimated 9,100 people sleeping rough in Great Britain. This figure can be reduced to zero within ten years. This chapter details the solutions to rough sleeping. It necessarily and intentionally repeats some solutions and recommendations from other chapters. We focus on rough sleeping as an urgent priority and look at it within a wider strategy in each nation. It also details what investment is needed for those solutions to be implemented. Fast forward a couple hours and this guy's mental state, combined with the drugs he used, was rapidly deteriorating and becoming incredibly violent. This guy suddenly believes he has diamonds embedded in his colon. He believes if he can get them out, he can bribe us with the diamonds and we will set him free. Slowly but surely this guy starts shoving his hand up his ass. We are well into night shift and don't have the staff to do an extraction, so we call for backup from the street deputies. Backup is 30 minutes out. TL;dr responded to a fight once to find one guy had poured boiling chemicals and Vaseline on a guy's face while he slept. "mollywhop776. 32. The night showed rough sleeping is still apparent in the Square Mile, but people who sleep rough are not always willing to accept any kind of help. During five hours we met six rough sleepers, two of whom agreed to help from NSNO. If eradicating rough sleeping is ever possible, NSNO and other charities still have a lot of work to do. On Boxing Day, BBC London will talk to charities and the mayor's housing advisor Richard Blakeway about how realistic the pledge to end rough sleeping in the capital is.
